WAS ADVERTISER'S MAN

RECORD OF MORT STEVENS
ONCE LOCALLY APPLAUDED

WAS PRIZE BILK THROUGH OTHER-WISE REPRESENTED BY THE MORNING PAPER—EM-
BEZZLER-BUNCOER.

Following is the record, as published by a Seattle paper, of one Mort Stevens, who at one time worked as an Advertiser reporter and that paper applauded in highest terms as "champion amateur boxer, broad jumper, high diver, etc., etc., wearer of 135 medals." Stevens' chief exploit while here was to attack Editor Gill in the old Republican office. The attack was entirely volunteer work though generally believed to have been inspired in the Advertiser office (Gill shot Stevens, who was generally credited with getting all he deserved. The Advertiser, however, took Stevens' "dying" statement and threw various loads of bouquets to its agent, whose record is here given:

The Garonne brings news that will be hailed with glad acclaim by various and sundry persons, principally newspaper men, in Seattle and perhaps other cities about the Coast. Mort Stevens, known here as Earl Barrington, is in jail at Seattle. Moreover he has the serious charge of embezzlement hanging over him.

The good people of Seattle were unsophisticated enough to elect Stevens city assessor and collector. It took him four months to get $2,500 behind in his accounts. As those who know Stevens in this city it will be immediately evident that since his return to the North he has lost none of his old-time speed. Stevens was determined. When he had as planned it wouldn't have taken him more than a couple of weeks to get away with a trifling sum like $2,500.

It was some time ago that a young man who called himself Earl Barrington walked into one of the local newspaper offices and asked the city editor for a job. He got it. For several days he worked, and as he was a bright fellow, he kept his job. After that he found other ways of making money that were much easier and he quit working. But, as has been said, he was a bright fellow and he still held his job.

Barrington was tall, handsome, well built and smooth shaven. To one of the other men in the office his features looked familiar, but he could not place the man.

He thought over it and finally concluded that he was mistaken; that he had never known Barrington before.

One evening the two were sitting in a downtown restaurant. Barrington was telling of some of his experiences on the Chilcot trail. The other newspaper man had also been on the Chilcot trail and as they were talking a great light broke over him.

Was Run Out of Dawson.
"Hell," he said, "I know you. Your name is not Barrington. It's Stevens. You were run out of Dawson. You had whiskers then."

"You win," said Barrington. "Mortimer Earl Stevens. Don't give me away."

The other man saw no reason why he should not keep the secret, especially as Barrington told a hard luck story of how he was trying to straighten up, and agreed to say nothing.

A little of Barrington's history before his arrival in Seattle may be in order. He had come out West, as he said from Chicago on his way North the summer before his return to the newspaper field of this city. He claimed to be the son of a wealthy Chicago manufacturer. He also claimed to have worked on Chicago papers and told many experiences of his newspaper life in the Windy City. This part of the tale he told is probably true, for he gave evidence of knowing something of the newspaper profession.

At other times, however, he varied the story by saying in confidence that he was the son of an English earl.

At any rate, Barrington, or Stevens, as he then called himself, started North. A short time later his wife followed him from the East. That was the last heard of him in Seattle for some time, but the story of his doings in Dawson afterward became known.

Abandons His Wife.
After his wife joined him, he abandoned her, penniless, casting her off to associate with low women. She afterward obtained a divorce and returned East.

He left Dawson suddenly. The reason was that he had borrowed a valuable diamond ring from a friend. Walking down to the river, he saw a launch that didn't seem to be working. Being always fond of sport, he decided he would take a launch ride. So he climbed aboard and started down the river. In his hurry he forgot to return the ring, which was worth something like $1,500. Some miles below Dawson he abandoned the launch.

That was all before he returned to Seattle. Once here again he found that working for a living was altogether too slow. Accordingly he began to cast about for other ways. He made friends of women of the town and gamblers and tenderloin saloon keepers. From all of them he borrowed money. But this did not suffice. He needed more, for the life he was leading was a spectacular one and the devious and various kinds of "dough" confagurations he invented were many.

At various banks and loan offices around the city Barrington was able to borrow money. He securing other names besides his own on promissory notes. Every man in the newspaper office in which he worked had loaned money to Barrington, but with supreme nerve he approached them all with the request to sign his notes, which were usually for $50 or $100.

Each man in the office knew he was being humored, but with the exception of two, each affixed his name to one of Barrington's promises to pay. Probably each had a sneaking idea that Barrington would pay him his personal obligations before he left the city.

Finally, he found that he had bled the crowd for all they would stand. One morning there came to the office the tale of a wild orgy in which Barrington and another newspaperman of whom he had made a companion had taken part. The others were several women of the town. That day Barrington didn't show up at the office.

He Never Came Back.
The crowd began to get anxious and a quiet investigation was set on foot. It developed that Barrington had planned his departure for some time. He had borrowed $100 from one of the women with whom he and his friend had had their big time and the two men had left for parts unknown.

There was consternation in the newspaper office. One of the men who had gone in the heat of all watch- over departing steamer for a week, in the hope that Barrington would endeavor to return north. The police were notified and assisted in the effort to locate the two. Barrington's companion has never been found.

It was a year later that Barrington was located in Dawson. He had gone back with another story of hard luck and had been allowed to stay. He remained there until last winter, when he was heard of at Nome.

Barrington's father had in the meantime gone to Dawson and squared up his difficulties there, in order to keep the Canadian government officers off his trail. The launch escape was but one of the things for which he was wanted. The elder Stevens was a California instead of a Chicago man, as his son had said.

Got Chance of His Life.
Being always of good address, with pleasing personality, he made friends easily and apparently he took in the whole of Nome. At any rate, he became the holder of a position of trust, where he had the handling of considerable sums of money. This was what Barrington had been waiting for all his life, but he must have overlooked precautions, for the story of his downfall was brought down on the Garonne.

Somehow, Barrington or Stevens, had become a member of the Arctic Brotherhood, and when the steamer left there was talk of the members of the order collecting enough money to make up his shortage. The city officials, not wishing to be hard on him, had agreed that if this should be done, they would not press the charge.

EDWARD K. LILIKALANI

ROYAL LINEAGE OF MAN
ELECTED FROM 4TH DISTRICT

WILL BE HIS SIXTH TERM AS A MEMBER OF LEGISLATURE.
SERVED VARIOUSLY UN-DER MONARCHY.

Edward K. Lilikalani was born at Koloa, Island of Kauai. His parents were Kanihomaou (m) and Nalimoo Kiope (f), on the 5th day of August, 1852. He is a descendant of a long line of high chiefs of Kauai and Hawaii, and raised in a chiefly manner by Lilikalani the Great, and Hana Uluani, his wife, chiefs of very high rank of the land, who are now deceased.

Edward K. Lilikalani was educated first in the Government schools at Koloa, under the direction of Rev. J. W. Smith, school agent of the district; from there he entered the high school of Lahaina in 1869, graduated from that institution in 1873, entered Punahou college in 1873, elected as a Representative for the Legislature from Honolulu in 1876, became secretary and treasurer for the legislature, W. P. Leleioaoku, in 1877, married Miss Hana Pinao at Kawaiahae in 1877, appointed District Magistrate for Kawaiahae District, Kauai, in 1878, became one of the heirs of H. H. Chas. Kanaia (See Haw. Reports) in 1879, elected as a Representative for the Legislature from Honolulu (second time) in 1880, became secretary and treasurer for Queen Kapiolani in 1881, elected Representative from Honolulu (third time) in 1882, member of Privy Council of State in 1882, elected Representative from Honolulu (fourth time) in 1881, Lieutenant of "Princess Own" volunteer company in 1885, elected Representative from Honolulu (fifth time) in 1886, member of the House of Nobles, the constitution had not been changed, in 1887, Knight of the Royal Order of the Crown of Hawaii in 1888, Knight of the Royal Order of "Star of Oceania" in 1888, captain of the Kings staff in 1889, Knight of the Royal Order of Kapiolani in 1889, Knight of the Royal Order of Kalahele in 1889, Lieutenant King's body guard in 1890, clerk in the Marshal's office in 1891, member of Privy Council of State during Queen Liliuokalani's reign, 1891, colonel on Her Majesty's staff, 1892, clerk in the Supreme Court, 1893, secretary to Queen Dowager Kapiolani in 1894, clerk in the office of the Kapiolani Estate, Ltd., in 1897, silver wedding (25 years) at Kawaiahae in 1902, entered the Republican party in 1903, clerk in tax office in 1904, elected as Representative in the Legislature from Fourth District, 1904.

Edward Kamakau Lilikalani is one of the legal heirs of H. H. Charles Kanaia, deceased intestate, who was the father of King W. C. Lunali of Hawaii, therefore this would make Edward K. Lilikalani a son of the late King of Hawaii. He is the son of His Majesty King Lunalilo and Queen Kalahele, consort of Kamehameha III, descended from the same source, viz: Moana (f), who was one of the ancestors of the Kings of Hawaii and being of a line of high and celebrated chiefs in the history of Hawaii. (See the pedigree of H. H. Charles Kanaia in Haw. Reports, Vol. 1, page 639.) That decision clearly states that Edward K. Lilikalani is a blood relative, and an heir at law if the following chiefs, had they died intestate, viz: Her Highness Ruth Kaelehuani, Her Highness Bernice Pauahi Bishop, His Majesty Kamehameha IV., His Majesty Kamehameha V., Her Highness Princess Victoria Kaiulani, and King Lunalilo. All the kings of Hawaii were descended from Moana (f) the great-grandmother of Edward K. Lilikalani. Moana (f) begat Kanuha the Great, Moana the great begat Kamakau the Great, who begat Kanihomaou, the father of Edward K. Lilikalani.

Moana (f) begat Kahuwa (f) who begat K. Kapekape, mother of Queen Kapiolani and H. H. Charles Kanaia, the father of H. M. King Lunalilo of Hawaii.

Moana (f) begat Kanaia the Great, Kanaia the Great begat Kamehameha, who begat H. H. Matato Kamehameha, the father of H. M. King Kamehameha IV., V., Victoria Kamehameha, and Ruth Kaelehuani.

Moana (f) begat Haku (f), Haku begat Hao (m), Hao begat Luahine (f), who begat Kona, the mother of H. H. Princess Bernice Pauahi Bishop. Therefore, by that decision, which is now a part of the laws of the land, it is clearly shown that Edward K. Lilikalani is a blood relative of H. H. Charles Kanaia, father of King Lunalilo, and H. H. Matato Kamehameha, father of King Kamehameha IV. and V. and Ruth Kaelehuani, and that Edward K. Lilikalani's blood comes through the veins of the Kings of Hawaii; that he is the true heir and one of those who sit on the throne of Kamehameha III. Therefore Edward K. Lilikalani is a prince of the blood and a true successor to the Kings of Hawaii and as he is the true heir and one of those who sit on the throne of Hawaii had monarchy existed. It is as clear as the noon-day sun, without any false pretense, without any fraud or deception, but that he has lived lowly and meekly, not has he paraded his many royal titles so as to be called "The Prince" or "His Royal Highness," but, on the contrary, he
